Re: Unimacts' False Advertising

Counsel:

As you are aware, we represent Ayr Energy, Inc. ("Ayr Energy"). It recently was brought to our attention that your client, Unimacts Global, LLC ("Unimacts") has made false and misleading claims about its products and certifications.

Specifically, on the unimacts.com/transformers webpage (<https://www.unimacts.com/transformers>), a snip of which is annotated below, Unimacts prominently displays a cULus Listed mark, which signals that a product is officially certified to United States and Canadian safety standards:

However, a thorough search of the official UL Product iQ database, available at <https://productiq.ulprospector.com/en>, reveals no listing for any of Unimacts, Zetwerk, or KRYFS, much less any listing for the companies' transformer products.

Displaying a UL safety mark without a valid certification constitutes false advertising and misleads consumers regarding product safety. That harms consumers and Ayr Energy, a competitor. As a result, Unimacts is liable for at least false advertising and unfair competition under federal and state law, entitling

Ayr Energy to civil remedies, money damages, immediate and permanent injunctive relief, and an award of attorneys' fees.

Ayr Energy takes this violation seriously, as it harms Ayr Energy on an ongoing basis in the market, and irreparably so. Ayr Energy is prepared to take all steps necessary to remedy this, including seeking emergency and preliminary relief.

Nevertheless, we are reaching out to see if Unimacts will agree to cease making this false and misleading statement without the need for immediate judicial intervention. Accordingly, Ayr Energy requests that you please confirm in writing, by no later than 5 pm PT on May 29, 2026, that Unimacts has removed the false and misleading reference to the UL safety mark from the marketing material at issue, and anywhere else the statement or those similar have been made. Alternatively, if we are somehow mistaken, and Unimacts does have a valid UL safety mark, please direct us to the company's official UL File Number so we can confirm.

Ayr Energy reserves all rights.

Sincerely,

/s/ Christine V. Sama

Re: Unimacts' False Advertising

Counsel:

I am writing to follow up on my May 27, 2026 letter, which you did not respond to.

As explained in my prior correspondence, your client, Unimacts Global, LLC (“Unimacts”), has made false and misleading claims about its products and certifications.

Specifically, on the unimacts.com/transformers webpage (<https://www.unimacts.com/transformers>), a snip of which is annotated below, Unimacts prominently displays a cULus Listed mark, which signals that its product is officially certified to United States and Canadian safety standards:

However, a thorough search of the official UL Product iQ database, available at <https://productiq.ulprospector.com/en>, reveals no listing for any of Unimacts, Zetwerk, or KRYFS, much less any listing for the companies’ transformer products.

As previously detailed, this “certification” constitutes false advertising and unfair competition under federal and state law. In the face of Unimacts’s decision to ignore my prior letter and its continued false advertising, Unimacts’s conduct is undeniably willful.

Counsel,

Your note about Ayr Energy's advertising confirms that Unimacts's is improper. As you concede, Unimacts does not hold a UL certification, but it still holds itself out as holding a UL "certification." Ayr Energy does not do this. Ayr Energy accurately states that it can provide UL-certified products and components. If Unimacts offers UL-certified components for its transformer offerings (and that is dubious given that Unimacts never has delivered a custom transformer, a point you have never contested), Defendants must market that accurately and not instead falsely claim to hold a certification they do not hold.

Ayr reserves all rights.

Tim

EXTERNAL

Hi Tim,

As you and your client should be aware, customers of transformers often request parts, and sometimes entire transformers, to be UL-certified. Zetwerk and Unimacts ensure that, when requested, components, manufacturers, factories, or even full transformers (as necessary) are UL-certified. Unimacts' website indicates that such a certification is available (among others) and there is nothing confusing about that to anyone who understands this industry.

Ayr certainly knows this. It displays the "UL" symbol on its own website and claims to provide UL-certified components but is not, itself, listed on the UL Solutions Product iQ database. Given the multitude of parts, manufacturers, factories, components, and transformers that are UL-certified each year, your request amounts to nothing more than a fishing expedition.

Best,
Drew
